JOHN ARCHIBALD SESSIONS

To the Members of the Class of 1921:

In this First Class Report now submitted to you is included in so far as has been possible an accurate and detailed account of the Class during its four years of College. It is hoped that this report will help to recall to its readers the good old days in Cambridge when 1921 ran Harvard.

On behalf of the Class I wish to take this opportunity to voice our appreciation of all those who helped to make our graduation last June such a success. First, President Lowell for his inspiring Baccalaureate Sermon—and may I say here we thank him even more for the solicitude and kindness which he has ever shown to our Class; if not actually a class-mate he is at least a Twenty-oner in spirit.

The Class Day Committee, the heads of the Senior, Phillips Brooks House, Beck and other big spreads, the Marshals, the Odist, the Poet, the Chorister, the Tree Orator, who should have been hung from the very tree under which he spoke, the Ivy Orator with his bubbling wit, the baseball team, the kindly weather man, the Cambridge Police Force, the Bootleggers Union—one and all they deserve and they have our heartfelt thanks and appreciation for putting on such a good show last June.

Terry, the omniscient and omnipotent, who has in the past stuck by us all through thick and thin, still sticks by us. Our thanks are due him for his painstaking work on this report.

IMPORTANT: I make this final appeal to you to keep me constantly posted as to your addresses, and to send me all the news about yourselves while it is news, for the Class is interested and has a right to be, in the doings of each man. The life of 1921 in the future must be a useful one in which the Class shall carry no small amount of influence with those who are directing Harvard destinies. It is only by individual responsibility in notifying the Secretary that the organization of the Class can become effective—an organization of great benefit to its loyal members and of great use to Harvard.

THOMAS S. LAMONT, Secretary.

BACCALAUREATE SERMON

TO THE CLASS OF 1921

BACCALAUREATE SERMON

By A. Lawrence Lowell.

Isaiah V: 21, 22

Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter! Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes and prudent in their own sight!

Wisdom VII: 24

The multitude of the wise is the welfare of the world.

The first of these texts is a denunciation; the second is a promise. The statements, however, are only two different aspects of a single truth. No one thinks that he is himself putting darkness for light, evil for good, or bitter for sweet; but every one is sure that some other people are doing so, and, at the present time, that many people are doing it in a very exaggerated and dangerous way. Great numbers of good men and women are seriously alarmed today at ideas that are being propagated, and they think that by shutting their own ears and the mouths of others the danger can be escaped. They remind one of the people in Kingsley's Water Babies, who walked backwards saying "Don't tell us!' But surely the way to overcome a wrong opinion is not to silence it, but to show its falsity.

The world is in confusion,—the natural result of the turmoil of thought, the ebullition of feeling that accompany and follow a great war. Men's minds are like the sea after a storm, where, although the wind has gone down, the billows still roll and break, irresistible in their huge mass, and threatening to founder even the ship that has ridden out the gale. Conditions have not yet returned to a normal state; nor has the world adjusted itself to them. In such a state of bewilderment, of misunderstandings, of cross purposes, what is needed? The answer is clear thinking.

Of course every one believes that he thinks clearly himself. So did the little Scotch girl, who said "Grandmother, all the world is daft but thee and me, and I think thee a little queer sometimes.'' No one really thinks clearly unless he has thought long and profundly; unless he comprehends the point of view of those who do not agree with him; unless he has found out the limitations of his own principles; for all theories, principles, maxims, and rules of human conduct can be carried ad absurdum. They all have their proper limits, because at some point they come into conflict with other principles not less true and not less limited. A doctor, for example, is sent for by a patient whose life may depend on how soon medical attendance arrives. The doctor's obvious duty is to go as quickly as possible. He goes in his auto at the utmost speed, and in so doing runs over and kills a child. Clearly we must revise the statement of the doctor's duty. He must go as quickly as is consistent with due care not to run over someone else.

Within a few days I have been reading Professor Hart's selection of Lincoln's speeches and letters. In running through them one is impressed by the careful limitation he constantly places upon the principles that he believes most intensely. He thought slavery morally wrong, but while unflinchingly opposed to its extension to the territories he would not countenance attacks upon it in the State because he was of opinion that there is was protected by the Constitution. The principle that slavery being wrong should be opposed was limited by another principle that the Constitution and laws should be upheld; and he never advocated abolition by force until he felt justified in doing so on the ground that it was a proper military measure in carrying out his constitutional duty to preserve the union. In reading his writings one sees that this was not the result of political foresight, but of integrity and clearness of thought. One principle did not blind him to another, for he perceived both and therefore the limitations each imposed upon the other.

Let us take the principle of patriotism, the desire to promote by all possible means the prosperity of the country, the nation, the people to which one belongs. Few men are ready to deny the validity, the importance, the invioable moral obligation of that principle. Even in the groups of men which, before the war, proclaimed the superior obligation of class solidarity, or so-called internationalism, there were few men who failed, when the war came, to take the part of the nation to which they recognized that they belonged. There had been an expectation that the socialists of Germany would refuse to support their Government and thus prevent war; but when the war came, that did not happen. In some cases, as in Alsace-Lorraine for example, the people, or many of them, did not consider that they belonged to the country that held sway over them; but that is another question, the question to what nation patriotism is due.

Are there any limitations to the principle of patriotism? Is dishonesty, for example, is the breaking of solemn treatries, is ruthless inhumanity to a weaker neighbor, justified by a belief that it will conduce to the prosperity of one's own people? Is a nation morally right in seizing anything it can obtain by force or fraud, or has it a duty to deal fairly with others, and respect their rights? Would Cain have acted properly if, instead of being a single individual, he had been fifty millions to Abel's twenty-five millions and had called himself a nation? Is a nation under any moral obligation to abstain from acts against other nations which, if committed by a private individual, would make him an object of general abhorrence, and perhaps bring him to the gallows? Is abstaining from such things the limit of its moral obligation, or does it have any positive duties to others? In short, does the Golden Rule have any application among nations?

Treitschke proclaimed the doctrine that there can be no moral obligation superior to the national interest, and many Germans adopted his ideas in whole or in part. I think it may be argued that if this conception of the State, or something akin to it, had not been prevalent in Germany it would not have been possible for any men, however close to the source of authority, to have led Germany into the war. It may at least be urged that it was this attitude of mind which furnished the backing for the attempt to take advantage by war of the situation in Europe, for invading Belgium in violation of the Treaty, and for the wanton destruction of the means of recu-peration in France. If it be true that the Great War was a natural result of the principal that there is no moral obligation superior to the national interest, then the blame for the ghastly suffering endured, and for all that has been suffered since and will be for years to come, lies not only with those who taught that doctrine and those who acted upon it, but also with those multitudes of great and small who accepted it and by so doing swelled the tide of popular opinion that made the war possible. Observe, I am not expressing an opinion on any of these questions. In this place it would hardly be proper for me to do so. I am merely seeking to insist upon the responsibility of every man for his opinions by pointing out how his personal opinions go into the great scales in which the destinies of mankind are balanced.

If it be true that the war came because the people of Germany in their opinions put evil for good, darkness for light and bitter for sweet, then we can only say of the calamities that have come upon their country as Lincoln said of the woes of the Civil War, "True and just are thy judgments altogether." We can add with him, "Let us judge not that we be not judged"; or rather let us beware that by harboring in our minds unsound opinions we fall not into like condemnation.

In this matter of patriotism it is the solemn duty of every man to think clearly what, if any, are its moral limitations, and what duties and responsibilities it involves. It is his duty to try to discover when and where and how other moral obligations limit those that he owes to his country, and how far his country is limited in its moral freedom of action by the duties that it owes to other portions of mankind. Future wars, future calamities, future miseries incalculable, or, on the other hand, future prosperity, future intellectual and spiritual advance, may depend upon solving these questions aright; and by the solution of these questions I mean their solution by the balance of the opinion of all individual men.

The same thing applies in other relations of life of a public or semi-public nature. We hear much of the rights of property and of labor. Is the owner of property justified in managing it to augment his own profits, regardless of the general welfare; and is the laborer justified in curtailing production if it be to the detriment of the community at large; and if not, what are the proper limitations? Again, it is not my object here to express or imply answers to such questions, but to point out that they require answers; because the tranquillity and welfare of our country depend upon their being answered aright, and no man, whatever his position in life, can wholly free himself from the responsibility for the opinion he holds about them. As a people we are highly sensitive of public opinion, and that is made up of personal opinions held by each and all of us. We cannot, like the subjects of a despot, say that it is for the ruler, and not for us, to inquire and decide.

Most people, and perhaps in a peculiar degree the American people tend in the busy life of the world to save themselves from strenuous thought by taking refuge in the opinions of their associates, of the men in like occupations, of the party or group to which they belong. This saves some of them, indeed, from eccentricity, and from irrational extremes; but it does not absolve men from responsibility for the correctness of their opinions, or save the nation from the consequences of their errors. The fact that others make the same mistake is no excuse. Yet people who go with the prevailing current of opinion seldom feel any responsibility, still less contrition, when that current leads to wrongdoing or disaster. Corporate or co-operate selfishness is today a greater danger than personal selfishness, because it is more insidious, and wears the garb of something more noble than a mere personal aim. Although men are by nature gregarious creatures, they should not—like sheep,—move under the simple impulse of the mass. Man has the ability to think for himself, to weigh reasons, to forecast in some degree the future, and to reflect upon the consequences of his acts. In times like these it is of vital import that his responsibility for his individual opinions should be relentlessly asserted.

Clamor of a crowd is often mistaken for opinion. The art of producing the semblance of a public opinion by a general shout has progressed greatly within a generation. It is easy to provoke such a shout for a catchword which embodies a principle good in itself, without a perception on the part of the crowd that it has its limit, and that they are in effect being urged beyond that limit. Group psychology has been studied until we are familiar with its principles and its use. Professor Dicey remarked, in criticizing the historical method of studying human problems, that when the cause of an abuse has been explained the abuse itself is half condoned. Let us not suppose that because psychology of crowds is a fact its results are therefore right; or that, because organization and machinery furnish a powerful weapon for propagating ideas on the part of those who believe in them, the idea themselves are therefore correct. The weapon may be used for an unjust or unwise movement as well as for one that is just and wise.

As I have said in this place before, we are told in the Bible that the Holy Spirit will convince the world of sin, of righteousness and of judgment, by which is meant one's own sin, and the righteousness and judgment of God; but we are too prone to think of someone else's sin, of one's own righteousness, and of judgment by popular vote.

What we need now is not more organization or more machinery, but more thought; personal thought, clear, far reaching and profound, as unbiased and illumined, and, not least, as widespread among our people as possible, for in the multitude of the wise is the welfare of the world; and where shall we look for this multitude if not among those upon whom has been lavished the best educational opportunities that our country can produce—the graduates of our colleges.

BACCALAUREATE HYMN

PAUL EDWARD JACKSON.

To the tune of "The Church's One Foundation"

Each year a generation
Each class her hope for fame;
To Harvard's firm foundation
We join in loud acclaim.
The wisdom of the ages
Within her portal lies,
That youth may turn the pages
And in her thought grow wise.

The lesson that she preaches
Is writ in every breast;
To him who upward reaches
She turns to give the best.
To lead a right existence,
To master strength with thought,
And struggle with persistence—
This lesson she has taught.

So rise ye sons in gladness—
About to leave her care,
Not with a heart of sadness
But with a promise fair;
For she has spent her learning
That ye shall be as men,
And through the years returning
Acclaim her oft again.

CLASS ORATION

By William S. Holbrook, Jr.

HARVARD COLLEGE—A BACK-WATER OF AMERICAN LIFE

Mr. Marshal, Classmates, Ladies and Gentlemen:

Set into the right wall of the Johnston Gate as you enter the College Yard is a small, almost ivy-colored slab. Here, where few see and fewer read, is inscribed the purpose of the founders of this college. The words are from that quaint, Puritan book, "The Fruits of New England," and run like this: "After God carried us safe to New England, and wee had builded our houses, provided necessaries for our liveli-hood, rear'd convenient places for God's worship, and settled the Civill Government; One of the next things we longed for, and looked after was to advance Learning, and perpetuate it to Posterity, dreading to leave an illiterate Ministry to the Churches, when our present Ministers shall lie in the Dust."

To those of us who know modern Harvard and the handful of students in the Divinity School, there is something almost amusing in this early purpose of founding a college to educate clergymen. But if we think that was all early Harvard did, we are quite wrong. Whether our forefathers intended it solely as a place of theological learning, or, more probably, as the foundation stone of a new political order is still an open question. The result, however, cannot be doubted: Harvard turned out leaders, wise leaders, for the state. Seventeenth century Harvard held a peculiarly intimate place in the life of the times. It was indeed almost a part of the "Civille Government" itself. Nor did the college fail to play an equally important role in Revolutionary times. And it is because of the relationship of this college to things political, that a short survey of the Harvard of yesterday is desirable before reviewing the conditions of today.

Imagine if you will a clap-boarded structure of three storeys standing somewhere near the site of the present Harvard Hall. As you approach the building, you notice struggling additions to one end. Those are the college kitchens while overhead in cheerless rooms the windows of which partly made of paper barely keep out the winter wind, the students live and study. But one of the ground floor rooms is most important for our purposes. It is a long, narrow chamber from the smoke-stained walls of which gleam down the few pieces of plate which the poverty-stricken college has already acquired. At one end blazes a cheery log fire while a long table occupies the center of the room. Round this sit the college, all the students and all the instructors. The gray heads and elders next the fire are the president and tutors; the youngsters of thirteen in the cold extremities of the room are the freshmen. With chairs pushed back across the white-sanded floor, the college listens while the president and tutors drink and talk and drink again. The conversation is very learned, theological, and dry. Such was the college commons, such was the real Harvard College of the Seventeenth century.

According to present-day ideas, nothing could be less fitted for turning out men to lead the state. Round this theological school, for it was little more, men are living, fighting, dying, in their struggle with actualities. Surely this little group of scholars could not help with that work. And yet in times when no election was valid without its accompanying sermon and prayer, when no expedition was launched against recalcitrant Indians until its members had been "exhorted" by the village minister, these pedantic clergymen that Harvard was then producing were no small factor in the settlement of the new land. Study the first hundred years of New England history and you will find that although it was a time of action, of fighting and hard work, it was the pale-faced, scholarly minister of the gospel who galvanized men into action, inspired the work, and dictated terms of peace to beaten savages. In teaching theology, narrow theology, Harvard was meeting the demand of the times. Ministers were leading the state and Harvard was training the ministers.

Another century rolls by, and from a fringe of coast villages, New England has become a group of well-settled colonies. No longer do ministers rule the people; lawyers, sea-captains, merchants—to such men the eighteenth century New Englander turns for guidance, while the rule of the Bible has been displaced by the arguments of Hobbes, Hooker, and Locke. And to this altered situation, Harvard brings a changed institution. No longer is the commons the center of the College, rather it is to be found in the stacks of Massachusetts Hall where the library is housed. Here in little alcoves round which the books have been arranged, and especially in one over which hangs the name of Hollis, lounge and read the men who will later sign the Declaration of Independence, and lead the armies of New England at Bunker Hill and at the siege of Boston.

Pick up, even today, those handsomely bound editions of a private collector, and you will find the shades of the Adamses, John Hancock, Gerry, and the rest of the New England group of revolutionary leaders coming up before you. Such was Harvard's answer to the changed problem of the time. So did the Revolutionary college successfully meet its peculiar needs as had its Puritan predecessor.

Another hundred years and more has gone by, and still this question comes before us as the most cogent of all problems which can be presented to an academic institution. Is the relation of the college and the college men we know to the rest of the world, the correct one? Are we graduating men at Harvard today who can take their place in the world as the undergradute of 1670 and 1776 did in theirs? By this, I do not mean that Harvard should be a Puritanical seminary or a school of political theory. The twentieth century asks neither for theological disputants nor for revolutionary philosophers; it desires men who can and will take their proper places as men of influence in the government of our cities, states, and nation. Is the Harvard that we know meeting the demand of the twentieth as well as she met that of the seventeeth and eighteenth centuries.

One's first impulse is to say "yes." The Law, Medical, Business, and now the Educational Schools certainly train the prospective attorney, physician, business man, and teacher for their respective professions. As far as her professional schools are concerned, Harvard has met and in some cases anticipated the demands of the age.

But turn to the college and it seems to me we are faced with quite a different situation. Here we are not learning the rudiments of a profession but the fundamentals of life itself. On the one hand, we are confronted with the dangers of making the college too narrowly a preparation for some definite aim in life. Many a college in recent years has made that mistake and has become little more than a glorified trade school. On the other hand we are menaced by the perils of college life and training becoming isolated from all reality. Is Harvard maintaining a course between these dangers which meets the requirements of the world today?

To my way of thinking, truth demands the admission that although Harvard is far superior to most colleges in this respect she is not meeting the situation as she should. The college man is altogether too little interested in the life, the fundamentals of which he is supposed to be learning. Elections come and go; international complications arise and blow over; a great book is written;—and as far as most of us are concerned, these events might just as well not have happened. Now and then, of course, a tremendous happening such as the Great War occurs and does produce a mightly stir among us. But the ordinary things of life, the ordinary matters of importance, are simply beyond the ken of the average undergraduate.

No one can criticize the college authorities. Never have subjects been taught with so much emphasis on present-day events; but with no results. Discussion groups and forums have been tried and have failed miserably. Lectures seem to draw only when the speaker is picturesque or so prominent that to be absent will bring the suggestion of having "missed it." There can be no doubt as to the conclusion. Harvard undergraduates are simply not interested in the things which must interest them directly after Commencement.

But it is not a lack of interest due either to stolidity or laziness. Nobody could be busier than the normal undergraduate. His team, his paper, his club show or other activity, sometimes several at once, occupy every spare moment which he can persuade the Office to let him take from the more formal part of college instruction. No matter what the cause of the present situation, it can not be traced to any desire for cloistered, scholarly solitude.

One professor has likened conditions to a "sunny backwater of American life." And this comparison is indeed well made. All of us have seen, while on some fishing trip, a pool or bayou which the summer sun and the sinking river have left behind, quite cut off from the main stream. There it lies calm before us under the July sun, waiting for the rising water or heavy rains to bring it back into the river. It seems as if nothing could be more still. But step a trifle closer and what do you see? Myriads of little water bugs swimming round and round in circles on the surface of the water, getting nowhere at all. Probably if we could speak the bug language, they would tell us how very "busy" they are.

And so it is with our college life. For four years we are immersed in a very pleasant, calm sort of existence waiting for the rising water of commencement to take us out into the wide world. Meanwhile we are very busy and happy swimming round in our own very interesting circles, but of the main stream out yonder we know nothing. No one has a quarrel with these college activities. They are too fascinating, interesting, engrossing for any one to even suggest alarm. But is there not some means by which in addition to swimming in our own backwater of life, we can also learn more of the currents we must buffet within a few years.

A solution which many a professor has found beyond his power, is, of course, too difficult for an undergraduate to attempt. We can only leave our experience as a guide for the graduates to work out in common with the men we leave behind and the new-comers who will enter next fall. For here is a problem which cannot be solved by votes of the Faculty. It is a question of mental attitude, not of curriculum or discipline. But some way, some means should be found to secure the proper relation between college life and national life, so that Harvard of the twentieth century can meet the demands of the present as she has always met those of the past . To me it seems that will only be when we can no longer say of Harvard that it is "a sunny backwater of American life."

CLASS POEM

By Francis W. MacVeagh.

King: How fares our cousin Hamlet?
Ham: Excellent, i' faith; of the chameleon's dish:
I eat the air, promise-crammed; you cannot feed capons so.

Hamlet, Act III, Sc. II.

Harper take your harp and sing;
Sing a song of Hope reborn;
Like a vesture it shall cling
To the youth at early morn.

Sing youth's innocence and might;
Sing of certain victory;
Sing the forces of the night
Overthrown by such as we.

No such song have I to sing
Bitter though it be to you—
Little matters anything
So 't is true.

What though in your ears there ring
Words and measures of scant cheer,
'Tis your duty now to sing
Of the golden course we steer.

Striding gladly on his way,
Heartened by my hopeful tune,
Youth would bless me—till the day
Turned at noon.

What siren song first lured them to a place
Where Knowledge vivisected groans in vain,
While those who wield the knives, to alien pain
Insensible, dismember every Grace?
What liar scorning small imaginings

Practised his guile on youth's credulity,
Malevolent in sole immunity
From Fortune's indiscriminating darts and slings?
Do they rejoice today to end such witnessings?

In the freshness of the morning while the dew is on the street,
There's a sound of cheery voices and a tramp of many feet.
Whither moves this multitude so free with jest and laugh?
Oh, anywhere the wind may blow they hurry as the chaff.
Is any wind now blowing? A fateful Wind and strong.

Their heads are high with confidence, with hope their eyes are bright;
Their pride is as a banner, with joy their hearts are light.
What is it that allures them? What is it that they fight?
A liar's promises to youth; the shadow of the night.
And what will be the issue? The echo of a song.

Vanguard of doubtful Powers, today
They go to join the age-long fight
Where in unbroken gaunt array
Relentless regiments of night
Shatter battalions of the Light.
Little they know of Wrong or Right,
But hasten forward to the fray,
But soon to meet Confusion, Flight,
And victims once as bold as they.

When the Sunset shadows lengthen, and the Day draws to an end,
There is silence in the city, and broken hearts to mend.
What of the Host that marched away? Few shall return again—
For most of them are perished and the rest are wed to Pain.
Is there no balm in Gilead. Nay, none that they shall find.

But some survivors shall return from the yet unconquered land,
Bewildered, though still hopeful, for they cannot understand
Defeat instead of Victory, the Victory they planned—

Yet Dawn shall find them martialling another ardent band.
And how shall this one prosper? As the Blind that trust the Blind.

Harper take your harp and sing;
Sing a song of Hope reborn;
Like a vesture it shall cling
To the youth at early morn—
What though Time prove by and by
You are wrong?
What though Truth shall give the lie
To your song?

IVY ORATION

By David T. W. McCord.

Mr. First Marshal, Members of the Class of 1921, Ladies and Gentlemen:

We are assembled here upon this solemn occasion to observe the fourth anniversary of that eventful day when we first wriggled out of the subway and became students. There may be some, there may be many among you who doubt this—I don't mean the fact that we are gathered here, I mean many who doubt that we are students. After several winters in consultation with various professors the question of our status quo in knowledge has remained undecided. So, for the purpose of solving this tremendous riddle, Terry will help wile away the moments as I stand here speaking,—or shouting—by passing around small pink cards. If you enjoyed the Senior Spread and think that the fountains in the Yard are really artistic, you will kindly state that you believe that our judgment is superior. If, on the other hand, you detected delectable odors from the matchless kitchens of Memorial Hall, or were accused by some irate ticket-taker of going in and out at the same time, then you are at liberty to brand us dull, impossible, and bubbling over with Harvard indifference.

But to get down to real facts. Most of us have wormed our way into the inner recesses of University Hall and picked up here and there the trifling C or D or E that will send us, as the Real Orator would say, shambling down the Road of Life. We know our fate. If you asked us, point blank, what was the great thing we got out of College, we should reply: ourselves. It required great effort. When shortly we sit within the walls of Sanders Theatre, more sheepish than the skin we love to touch, we shall realize that all is over except the boat race and our own private one-oared race for the all-American dollar.

What interests you most of all is not our future. We don't know any more about that than you do. It is not our present. You have us right before you.

You are interested chiefly in our Past. Ah, ladies and gentlemen, I shrink within the folds of this 20th Century Toga when I face your bright, steely eyes and hear you whisper, Yes, yes; your past? Personally, I strongly object to such questioning. This speech is supposed to contain at least the rudimentary elements of humor as taught in English A. And what, I ask you, what is more insufferably stupid and foolish than a past? A few well-meaning critics who have cast a wary eye and several aspersions on this document unite in declaring that I have enveloped the details of our halcyon days in a mist—which doubtless arose from the damp, pre-Amendment period of Cantabrigia. Be all that as it may, if as Copey would say between the shifting of eye glasses, you will all get a tight hold upon these cold, cement seats, we shall carry on.

In those mellow R. O. T. C. afternoons of our initial year, spent in the Nurseries on the Charles, most of our time was passed in speculation and in drilling. The speculation was not of a material nature and dwelt upon how we could best get into actual service, while the drilling hinged chiefly upon manoeuvres in misfit, issued uniforms, and in trying to keep a number seven and a half hat from settling so far down on a number six and seven-eights head that vision should become impossible. From the very day that an absent-minded sergeant marched a platoon into the Watertownish waters of yon river we were soldiers, and helped to swell the legions of Fresh Pond (and our feet as well) while we investigated the possibilities of an enemy lurking behind a huckleberry bush, or slew the Waverley Hun by night in a home-made trench. By the next Fall our ranks had thinned and those who returned were swallowed up in the billows of the S. A. T. C. After the Armistice, the Navy sailed out of the Square and John Harvard climbed up on his pedestal and attempted to assume once more that studious look, rarely found anywhere except in the Tribe of Sub-Freshmen and in the Sanctum of the Widow.

Since then we have been devoting our spare time in aiding in the country's reforms. It is to the college man that the country looks for its brains—or something like that. We have been interested in most of the issues of the day (except the Crimson) ; we have seen the spokes shaken from the hub in the great Boston Earthquake that began with Lampy's "Transcript" number; we have started drives and have had drives thrust upon us, yea! we have been driven from door to door, until the Bursar has had to move his office to cheaper quarters; in short, my friends, Prohibition is the only great movement in which we have not helped.

When Swift wrote his "Battle of the Books" he could not have created a more fitting title for this four-year campaign at college. I feel especially that the men returning out of course and unclassified, the Unc's and the ocC's, that valiant little band, must imagine that examinations are made by an army of professors whose slogan is "They shall not pass!" Is it any wonder, then, that we view with increasing consteration, the lowering of entrance requirements! When you think of what we suffered, and of all the horrible conditions under which we entered, can you blame us for objecting when the hurdles are lowered in the first heat?

Our day in Mark Twain's favorite climate are almost over. When we depart we shall leave our hearts behind us and enough clothes with Max Keezer to stock the incoming classes. We shall leave the shades of bygone Black and Tans lying beneath the marble slab on Jimmie's counter. No more can we hear Mr. Cram singing his wierd ballads of the Uncharted C's; no longer may we slumber through the deadly nine-o'clock.

This is our Class Day; this is the time of which poets have sung, at which food is king, and during which almost anything may happen. In a few minutes, like a moving picture reel, you will be released and gaily go off in quest of the candy egg-sandwich and the powerful macaroon. Let we warn you right here that the Yard is a large and dangerous place. Even we staid old Seniors marched in a body to the Baccalaureate Services at Appleton Chapel, because only a few knew the way! I remember a terrible story of a Senior who met an untimely end one Class Day. He had struggled over the intervening years between Gore Hall and the Senior Picnic only to lose himself at a Spread. People say he was last seen between the olives and the ice cream, though some have it that he fell bodily into the salad. At any rate, don't break the glass flowers, and remember that a punch in the hand is worth two down somebody's back. There are light refreshments for everybody and dark refreshments for those who know where to get it. There is music in the Fogg, in the air, and in our hearts. This is our Class Day; and what better can I wish you, in closing, than that your moments of happiness be as numerous as the flakes of confetti that will soon fill the air.

CLASS ODE

LEON A. DE TURENNE.

Fair Harvard, the time of our parting is near Ere we leave thee our voices we raise,
Mid these vine covered halls and the friends who are dear
We stand to unite in thy praise.
Like the hundreds before us we proudly depart
With a sigh for the years that have passed
But with conquering faith beating strong in each heart
Our beacon, our guide to the last.

Thy behests we receive as a message to heed
To preserve and transmit to the ages:
'Let each one as a rock in the tide of man's greed
Stand fixed and unmoved as it rages,
Till the winds again fall and the seas tranquil grow.'
Then in peace we thy sons shall be free
To transform each success that the times may bestow
Into honor, dear Mother, for thee.

LATIN ORATION

By Robert Bulman Drummey.

Salvete omnes qui has in aedes ad nostra sollemnia concelebranda laeti convenistis. Te primum, huius universitatis praeses illustrissime, salvere iubeo, qui summam sapientiam summam auctoritatem administrandis demonstrastti. Dignus illius es successor quem hodie annis et honoribus auctum robore invenili firmatum gratis animis saltamus.

Vos etiam salvere iubeo, socii inspectoresque huius universitatis, cum pastoribus ecclesiarum venerandis et omnibus fautorobus, qui consilio cura liberalitate res academicas conservatis.

Tibi summo civitatis magistratui salutem dico plurimam. Eius viri memor quem in isto officio secretus es leges intrepide sustinebis.

Adsunt etiam hodie praesidis nostri collegae aliquot praeclarissimi, Quorum tibi salutem dico, Universitatis Bostoniensis praeses doctissime, qui magnae urbis utilitate tam bene consulis. Et te salvere iubeo, huius civitatis Instituti Technologici praeses, qui tam in doctrinis liberalibus eruditus es quam in artibus machinalibus quas istio foves. Quam quam universitates nostrae legibus nescio quo modo vetantibus nuptias inter sese efficere non potuerunt, semper tamen eas communia amoris vincula tenent inrupta.

Nunc te saluto, cuius voltus habitusque humano amphor videtur. Universitati Yalensi aemulae nobis et amicae gratulamur, quae non solum omnium bonarum artium fautorem nacta est sed angelum.

Te quoque saluto, virum humanissium, patrae lumen, non magis consultum quam omnium gentium institiae.

Nunc vos, decani professores praeceptoresque nostri, salutitionem accipiatis, viri omnes eximia dignitate et gravitate. Quattuor annos mentes nostras docuistis, vitas formastes.

Vos, matres patresque, quibus omnia debemus, summo amore summo studio saluto. Quamquam non intellegitis quae dicam, beneqne redetis risibusque me hortamini. Insurratis tamen aliis: "Quid dicit? Cur Latine loquitur? Cur non Anglice? Nolite me rogare: ego nescio.

Pro amicis meis, omnes amicosqui huc hodie adsunt saluto. Sine vobis vita inanis est. Pro amicorum meorum puellis, puellas omnes, qui dulce ridentes dulce loquentes ad corda nostra incendenda in hoc theatrum convenerunt urens saluto. Sine vobis, credite mihi nulla vita est!

Salvete denique vos, qui quattuor annos condiscipuli atque amici fiutis. Hodie, studiis relictis, orbem terrarum videmus non—dum ex belli horrendi vulneribus refectam. Pacem habemus, sed ubi sunt pulchra illa omnia qua ipsius belli tempore somniabamus? Certe non pro nostra tantum patria sed pro toto genere humano contra omnis humanitatis hostes arma sumpsimus. Haecine nunc obliviscamur? Immo vero nos praesertium humanis doctri nis hic instituti humani nil esse a nobis alienum putemus, sed omnibus viribus enit, amur ve frustra haec clades superata sit. Magnus nos labor iam vocat. Accadamus invenes quamquam imepriti invenum tamen vigore freti ad eos qui superbis deballatis paci imponere morem legemque conantur.
